The doubtful districts are in States where they are best organized and in a position to affect the result. It might not be a difficult thing in West Virginia, North Carolinia and Virginia, where the result is in doubt, to give the certificate to the Democrat and let the contest go the House. This would give them a majority on the outset. A member octo the House. This would give them a majority on the outset. A member occupying a contested seat has all the rights and privileges of any other member, and, even if it is evident that he will afterward be unseated, he can vote in the organization of the House upon all measures that may come up while he occupies the seaf, and even upon his own contest. In the Southern States the Democrats guaration. In the Southern States the Democrats guration ful districts, and there is practically nothing that could be done to prevent. They
